FOREWORD

This pamphlet presents a description of the organization and functions of the courts and of the penal and correctional system of the State of Pennsylvania (Part One). It also contains a directory or guide to the resources, State and county, for the correction and treatment of offenders both adults and children (Part Two).

The first edition, published in May, 1927, was based on a State-wide study of court and penal procedure made by the Pennsylvania Committee on Penal Affairs. This survey has been revised mainly through correspondence with penal officials and institution heads. It is hoped that this revised edition may be of assistance to those who in public or private service deal with offenders against the laws of Pennsylvania, or with children and adults needing the protection and care of the State.

The Court and Correctional System of Pennsylvania

I. The Courts of Pennsylvania

The Courts of Common Pleas, the Courts of Quarter Sessions, and the Courts of Oyer and Terminer of the 67 counties of Pennsylvania are grouped into 56 Judicial Districts, with a president judge in each district.

Of these 56 Judicial Districts, 47 consist of one county each; 7 consist of two counties each; and 2 consist of three counties each. Counties which are grouped into Judicial Districts comprising two or three counties because of the smallness of the population, have only one judge presiding over the courts of the district. (See p. 25.)

There are 146 judges in all presiding over the criminal courts of the State. In each of the judicial districts the same judge, or judges, hear and dispose of cases in the Courts of Common Pleas, the Courts of Quarter Sessions and the Courts of Oyer and Terminer.

1. Courts of record having civil jurisdiction only.

(a) Courts of Common Pleas. These courts, provided for in the Constitution of Pennsylvania, are for the trial of civil cases only and have no criminal jurisdiction.

(b) Orphans' Courts. The Orphans' Courts deal with estates and adoptions and have no criminal jurisdiction. Orphans' Courts are mandatory in counties of 150,000 population or over and permissive in other counties.

2. Courts of record having criminal jurisdiction.

(a) Courts of Quarter Sessions and Courts of Oyer and Terminer. The courts of record having original jurisdiction in criminal cases and which are provided for in the Constitution of Pennsylvania, are the Courts of Quarter Sessions and the Courts of Oyer and Terminer. Crimes are tried in both of these courts, but the graver crimes are tried in the Courts of Oyer and Terminer.

3. Specially created courts.

There are in addition two specially created courts, established by legislative enactment. The Municipal Court of Philadelphia has exclusive jurisdiction in juvenile cases, domestic relations cases, in cases of women arrested for disorderly street-walking, and over children between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one. It also has concurrent jurisdiction with the Courts of Quarter Sessions of Philadelphia County in cases of misdemeanors and certain crimes. The County Court of Allegheny

County has exclusive jurisdiction in juvenile and non-support cases for Allegheny County.

4. Special sessions or hearings.

(a) Juvenile sessions or hearings. The Juvenile Courts of Pennsylvania are merely divisions of the Courts of Quarter Sessions in all counties except in Allegheny and Philadelphia Counties, where they are divisions of the County Court of Allegheny County and the Municipal Court of Philadelphia.

(b) Non-support sessions or hearings are held in the Courts of Quarter Sessions except in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties, where these cases are heard in the Municipal Court of Philadelphia and in the County Court of Allegheny County.

5. Courts not of record with lay judges and having summary jurisdiction in criminal cases.

The Constitution of Pennsylvania also provides for justice of the peace courts, called magistrates' courts in Philadelphia and aldermen's courts in other cities. These courts usually have lay judges and are not courts of record. They have a limited authority in summary cases concerning minor misdemeanors and crimes. Proceedings may be initiated in them by information, so that offenders may be held for the Courts of Quarter Sessions, Courts of Oyer and Terminer and for the Municipal Court of Philadelphia or the County Court of Allegheny County. Appeals from these courts are also taken to the courts of record. Juvenile and non-support proceedings may be initiated in these courts except in Philadelphia County.

6. Courts of Appeal.

The Courts of Appeal in Pennsylvania are the Superior Court and the Supreme Court. They are courts of appeal or review only and have no original criminal jurisdiction.

II. Outline of Court Procedure

1. Criminal procedure. The steps in criminal procedure after an arrest for a crime or misdemeanor consist of a hearing before a magistrate, justice of the peace or alderman. These officials have certain authority to convict summarily in cases of petty offenses. Offenders held for court are either released on bond or detained in jail until the time for hearing in criminal court arrives. Offenders are not brought to trial in criminal court unless a prima facie case is made out and the grand jury finds a true bill. The trial except in cases of petty offenses is a jury trial.

If the jury convicts, the judge has it within his discretion to send the convicted individual to one of the State prisons, to a reformatory, or to a county penal institution depending on the nature of the offense and statutory provision made for punishment. He may also fine, assess costs, suspend sentence, and substitute probation for custodial care, or he may release on parole after a period of custodial care. He may also release an individual on probation or parole to pay costs or fine in installments to a probation officer.

2. Fornication and bastardy procedure. For this procedure, which is a regular criminal procedure to determine the paternity of an illegitimate child, a grand jury indictment is required, and a jury trial is necessary. The defendant, however, may waive his right to such a proceeding. If he does so, an order is made by the judge without these formalities. A fine may be imposed, a support order for the child be made, and an order for lying-in expenses of the mother, and funeral expenses of the child, if it dies, be granted after conviction or an acknowledgment of paternity to the court.

3. Juvenile procedure. Children arrested for offenses may be brought before a justice of the peace, alderman, or magistrate, but these officials have no authority over children except to dismiss or hold for Juvenile Court. In Philadelphia County preliminary hearings by magistrates are forbidden, and children are brought directly to the Municipal Court, Juvenile Division. Children's cases are usually heard in chambers or apart from the regular cases. There is no jury trial and no indictment by grand jury. The judge makes a decision unaided except by the report of a probation officer, when he has a probation officer to make an investigation. A child is not considered a criminal and therefore is not convicted of a crime. He is simply adjudged delinquent. The judge may discharge the child at the hearing, release the child on probation, send the child to an institution for children, release on a parole after a period of institutional treatment, fine the parents, or at any time discharge the child from the care of the Juvenile Court or from the custody of any institution.

The judges who hear juvenile cases, in addition to their authority over delinquent children, also have authority over dependent children, incorrigible children and neglected children. These children, as well as those who are accused of delinquency, may be brought into court on petition of a parent, next friend or a citizen. Even in the case of a delinquent, the petition may be made to the juvenile division of the court and a proceeding before a magistrate is not necessary.

4. Non-support procedure. Hearings in cases of family non-support, whether of wives, children, or aged parents, are conducted without a grand jury indictment and are heard without a petit jury. The orders made for support in these cases are collected with the aid of desertion probation officers. The judges hearing these cases have wide powers to modify sentence and may change the order from time to time or punish violators of the order of the court if they fail to obey the conditions of their probation.

In Allegheny County non-support proceedings may be begun before a justice of the peace or alderman, or by direct resort to the court for the trial of such cases, the County Court of Allegheny County; in Philadelphia non-support proceedings must be initiated in the Municipal Court; and in counties other than Allegheny and Philadelphia the only method provided for initiating proceedings is through the courts of the justices of the peace and aldermen.

III. General Outline of County Penal System

Each county has a court, court house, clerk of Courts of Quarter Sessions and Oyer and Terminer, district attorney, county detective, jail, and a sheriff who in some of the counties acts as jail-keeper; in certain of the counties a warden is the administrative officer in charge of the county prison or jail. Separate criminal court records and dockets are maintained by each county. The judge or judges of any of the district courts may appoint a probation officer or officers for any or each of the counties comprising his judicial district. A judge, however, is not required to appoint probation officers if he does not think it wise or expedient to do so; the number of officers appointed by the judge is also left to his discretion. The salaries of probation officers when appointed regularly are paid out of county funds.

IV. General Outline of Probation and Parole System

1. The administration of probation and parole.

Probation is the conditional release of an adult after conviction, or of a child who has been adjudged delinquent at a juvenile hearing, and is a substitute for commitment to jail or to a penal institution in the case of an adult and a substitute for custodial care in an institution in the case of a child. Parole is the conditional liberation of an adult after a portion of the sentence imposed by the court has been served; and in the case of a child is the provisional release from an institution for delinquent children.

The judges of the Courts of Common Pleas of Pennsylvania, sitting as Quarter Sessions judges, or as juvenile court judges, have the power to administer probation, and have the authority to parole from county jails, workhouses, houses of correction, and juvenile institutions.

The judges of the County Court of Allegheny County and of the Municipal Court of Philadelphia also have authority to use probation and to parole from local institutions for the classes of offenders over which they have jurisdiction.

The justice of the peace courts, aldermen's courts, magistrates' courts, do not have power to use probation or parole. Neither the Orphans' Courts, Supreme Court nor the Superior Court has this power.

2. Function of probation or parole officers.

Probation officers attached to the courts supervise men, women and children placed on probation as well as those released on parole by the judges, while parole officers attached to State institutions supervise men, women and children paroled from these institutions.

The work of the probation or parole officers appointed by the courts consists of: (1) making social investigations for the judges to enable them to make wise decisions and to enable the probation officers to make plans for the probationers or parolees placed in their care; and (2) following up and giving social treatment to men, women and children on probation or parole. Social treatment consists of: (a) making individual adjustments that will enable offenders to take their places in normal family and social life; (b) co-ordinating the resources of the community, social, medical, psychological, recreational, employment, so that the proper adjustment of offending individuals may be made.

The social treatment of adults or children under supervision on probation does not differ essentially from the supervision of adults or children on parole.

Probation officers also collect moneys for the county (fines, costs, etc.) and for beneficiaries of support orders, etc.

3. Appointment of probation officers.

The judges of the Quarter Sessions Courts have authority to appoint probation officers for children under the Act of 1903 with its supplements, and to appoint probation officers for adults under the probation and parole Acts of 1909 and 1911 with their supplements. Under these last two acts, probation officers for adults may act as parole officers for adults. The judges of the Municipal Court of Philadelphia and of the County Court of Allegheny County also have authority to appoint probation officers for children and adults, under the special acts creating these courts. There is also statutory provision for the use of desertion probation officers in non-support and illegitimacy proceedings in any of these courts.

Although the salaried probation officers, regularly appointed by a court, usually act as parole officers when called upon to do so, the court at times appoints a specially designated person or official to act as a volunteer probation officer for children or adults paroled. Some of the courts use these volunteer officers to supervise both men and women on probation or parole, using the paid officers for the children; other courts use volunteer officers for men, with the women and children in charge of the salaried officers. Some of the courts use volunteer officers altogether; some of them use part time officers altogether for all their probationers and parolees.

According to Pennsylvania law, the man or woman to be appointed as volunteer or salaried probation officer must be "a discreet person of respectable character." There are no other requirements and no civil service examination is provided for appointment. The law also stipulates that women probationers must be supervised by women and men probationers must be supervised by men.

V. Use of Probation for Offenders

The judges may place adults on probation in charge of a probation officer, but it is not compulsory to do so. However, there are restrictions as to types of offenders and offenses for which probation may be used. The requirements are, first, that the offender has not before been in prison for crime either in Pennsylvania or elsewhere, and second, that the court believes "that the character of the defendant and the circumstances of the case are such that he or she is not likely to again engage in an offensive course of conduct."

However, individuals convicted of murder, administering poison, kidnapping, incest, sodomy, buggery, rape, assault and battery with intent to ravish, arson, robbery, or burglary, may not be placed on probation.

Although the act provides for no supervision for individuals placed on probation, progressive county courts have developed the practice of not placing individuals on probation without oversight of a probation officer regularly attached to the court and appointed by the judge.

The use of probation for family problems, such as non-support, and for children is not restricted.

VI. Use of Parole from Penal Institutions

1. *Parole from jails and local institutions. The judges having authority to sentence prisoners to county jails, Philadelphia House of Correction and Allegheny County Work-house may parole from these institutions in

* Since the Pennsylvania laws make no clear cut distinction between felonies and misdemeanors certain of the jails and county prisons which in the judgment of the court passing sentence are equipped to receive prisoners at solitary confinement and at hard labor, may receive long term prisoners who have committed grave crimes, and who would ordinarily be sent to State prisons. The judges sentencing individuals to these institutions may also parole them at their discretion.

the care of probation officers acting under the direction of the courts. Parole is based mainly on the conduct of the prisoner and not on work or vocational credits, since there is little or no work to test fitness for parole.

By the Act of May 11, 1923, P. L. 204, judges releasing men and women on parole from county institutions must place them "under the supervision of a designated probation officer."

2. Parole from State institutions.

(a) Parole by trustees from State prisons. The paroling of offenders from the State prisons is administered by the trustees of these institutions who make recommendations to the Pardon Board sitting at Harrisburg. The State prisons have their own parole officers to supervise parolees discharged from the State prisons.

(b) Parole by trustees from reformatories. The paroling of individuals sentenced to reformatories for young men and young women is in the hands of the trustees of these institutions without reference to the Pardon Board. The paroling of individuals committed to these institutions depends upon credits earned and is based on the response of the individual to the training and education provided by the institution. These institutions have their own parole officers to supervise parolees discharged from the reformatories. Probation officers co-operate on occasions with the State institutions, prisons and reformatories to supervise parolees.

(c) Appointment of parole officers. Parole officers may be appointed by the State prisons and reformatories and their salaries paid from the appropriations made by the State to these institutions.

(d) Supervision of parolees. Parolees from State prisons and reformatories do not always receive direct supervision by the parole officers of these institutions since they live in all parts of the State. Sponsors are used to supervise parolees and contacts are also made through correspondence on the part of the released man with the parole officer.

Note: The Board of Pardons has recently acquired jurisdiction over parolees from State institutions. See VII.

VII. Board of Pardons

The Board of Pardons is provided for under the Constitution and consists of Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Attorney-General and the Secretary of Internal Affairs.

Its functions are: (1) to make recommendations to the Governor concerning applications for pardon; (2) to make recommendations to the Governor concerning paroles recommended by trustees of State penitentiaries; (3) to have jurisdiction* over system of supervision of prisoners released on parole from Eastern and Western Penitentiaries and Pennsylvania Industrial Reformatory.

Note: For method of appointing administrator of parole system see VIII. Department of Justice.

VIII. Department of Justice

The head of the Department of Justice is the Attorney-General, who is also a member of the Board of Pardons.

Its functions are: (1) to furnish legal advice to the Governor, administrative departments, boards, commissions, and offices of the State government; (2) to supervise the legal business of each administrative department, board, and commission of the State government; (3) to collect debts, taxes, and accounts due the Commonwealth; (4) to represent the Commonwealth, its departments, boards, etc., in litigation; (5) to appoint a State supervisor of paroles and field agents to supervise the conduct of parolees from the Eastern and Western Penitentiaries, and the Pennsylvania Industrial Reformatory.

Note: The Board of Pardons has jurisdiction over the system of supervision of parolees from State institutions, see VII. Board of Pardons.

IX. Penal Institutions of Pennsylvania

1. County and local institutions.

Each of the 67 counties of Pennsylvania has a county jail. County jails have a two-fold function: (1) to house prisoners held for hearing, either in the magistrates', justice of the peace, aldermen's, Quarter Sessions, Oyer and Terminer Courts, or the specially created courts of record; (2) to receive offenders sentenced for a term of imprisonment. A number of county prisons and the Allegheny County Workhouse receive long term prisoners who have committed grave crimes. While each of the counties has a county jail, two of the counties have special institutions for offenders. Allegheny County has a Work-house at Blawnox, and Philadelphia County has a House of Correction at Holmesburg. These two institutions provide work for prisoners committed to them; the majority of the county jails have no work for prisoners.

2. State penal institutions and reformatories for adults.

In addition to the local penal institutions for adults, there are State institutions. These consist of penitentiaries and reformatories. The penitentiaries are: Eastern State Penitentiary, Philadelphia, and Western

* Under Act 416, approved May 1, 1929. The system of supervision was not yet completely established or organized when this Directory went to press. Work had been begun in the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh Districts.

State Penitentiary, Pittsburgh and Rockview (Centre Co.), and the State Industrial Home for Women, Muncy. These institutions are for the "imprisonment at hard labor by separate or solitary confinement," of men or women, sentenced for any period not less than one year, but such prisoners may also be sentenced to counties authorized to receive convicts of this description. The reformatories are: State Industrial Reformatory, Huntingdon,* and the State Industrial Home for Women, Muncy. Since commitment to the reformatories is in lieu of commitment to the penitentiaries, no sentence is for less than one year.

The reformatories have rather complete equipment for industrial and vocational training to fit prisoners for discharge or parole. The State prisons have a limited equipment for industrial training to fit prisoners for discharge or parole. The industrial training in the State institutions is in charge of the State Department of Welfare, Harrisburg.

X. Private Institutions for Women

There are two types of private institutions for women and girls: (1) Institutions for women and girls presenting conduct or behavior problems, such as the House of Good Shepherd, maintained by the Roman Catholic Church to which the commitment of women may be made by the courts and from which they may be paroled by the judges of the courts. (2) Institutions used as shelters for unmarried mothers and their children, such as the Florence Crittendon Homes, Salvation Army Homes, rescue homes both Roman Catholic and Protestant. These institutions, however, are not for the commitment of women and girl offenders except for the special types of cases to which they minister. Adolescent girls are occasionally committed to these homes for protective care. Follow-up work is done by some of the institutions.

XI. Institutions for Delinquent Children in Pennsylvania

There are three types of institutions for delinquent children in Pennsylvania, State, county and private: (1) the State and State-aided institutions for children, namely, the Pennsylvania Training School at Morganza, for boys and girls; Glen Mills School at Glen Mills, for boys; and Glen Mills School (Sleighton Farm), Darling, Pa., for girls. (2) the county institutions set up by various counties for the training of delinquent children, namely, Boys' Home at Reading; Gumbert School for girls, at Pittsburgh; Luzerne County Industrial School for Boys, Kis-Lyn; Thorn Hill School, at Warrendale, for boys. (3) The private institutions, such as the Philadelphia Protectory, Toner Institute, Boys' Industrial Home at Oakdale, etc., to which delinquent children are committed, and from which they may be paroled. Many of these institutions are educational institutions, equipped with elementary schools and providing vocational training.

* State Industrial Reformatory, Huntingdon. Young men between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five years who are not known to have previously been sentenced to a penitentiary or State prison in Pennsylvania, or in any other state, are admitted on a general sentence not to exceed the maximum specified by the Statute covering the crime.

 State Industrial Home for Women, Muncy. Girls and women between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five years are admitted on a general sentence not exceeding three years, except when the maximum term specified by law for the crime exceeds three years. Women of twenty-five years and over are committed for the term specified by the Statute covering the crime.

XII. Parole from Institutions for Delinquent Children

These institutions, whether State or county, parole on the basis of training. Parole is made through their own administrative officers. The judges, sitting as juvenile court judges who commit children to these institutions, also have the power to parole from them. The State institutions have parole officers and a number of county institutions also have their own parole officers or use the probation officers of the courts. When the administrators of these institutions discharge children on parole, the parole is made to the parole officer of the institution. Sometimes probation officers of the county to which the child is paroled, supervise the parolee. Some of the private institutions have their own parole officers; others use probation officers or interested individuals to supervise parolees.

XIII. State Department of Welfare

The State Department of Welfare has general supervision over the Penal System of the State of Pennsylvania.

The Bureau of Restoration, in this Department, inspects jails, work-houses, houses of correction, reformatories and State prisons, and directly administers the prison labor in the State institutions. It has no control over the convict labor in the county institutions. This bureau also collects data from courts and penal institutions, and compiles criminal statistics.

The Bureau of Children supervises institutions for delinquent children and does advisory work with probation officers dealing with juvenile delinquents.

Bureau of Mental Health supervises all institutions and agencies caring for mental patients, commonly called the insane, mental defectives, epileptics and inebriates of all ages; supervises the Farview State Hospital for the criminal insane; makes psychiatric examinations of prisoners for the State Board of Pardons; examines prisoners at the request of wardens; and maintains clinics throughout the State for the diagnosis of mental disease and defect. These clinics are available for the use of judges, penal officials, probation and parole officers.
